Automatic energy storage welding machines represent a breakthrough in welding practices by integrating energy storage systems, which critically influence welding performance. These machines utilize a sophisticated combination of power management and storage technology, allowing the welding process to optimize energy usage efficiently.

The wire is fed through the machine and the welding head to provide the connector material, and the tool on the head is called a wedge, hence the term "ultrasonic wedge bonding". The technology has been used in the semiconductor industry for decades, and is also familiar to the automotive industry and conforms to its standards, Holtkamper says.
